Prepositions

In the fourth grade classroom Over by the bay Underneath the school bus Toward the busy highway	By the old McDonald's At the grocery store For the hundredth time now On our neighbor's door
They start with words like in, by, at, for, from, with, on, of, to. They always end with a noun like dog or tree or food.	You can use them at the front now. You can use them in the back. You can use them in the middle or when you write a paragraph.
Oh! Can't use them up I say, now. Oh! They're not going away, now. Oh! They help you to explain, now. Oh! They'll make your sentence great, now. Go and make your teacher's day. Go and get a good grade. All you have to do is use a prepositional phrase. Gimme prepositional phrase!
A prepositional phrase can act just like an adjective. It answers one or both questions; what kind of or which one it is.	It can act like an adverb, too, and answer some questions for me. And when it does it will tell when or where, how, why, to what degree.
